Professor of home economics Cornell University. In 1927 Ethel Warin came to Cornell as professor of home economics in what was then the Department of Family Life. In 1945 the name was changed to the Department of Child Development and Family Relationships. This department is now called Human Development and Family Studies. Her greatest interest was in child guidance. She wrote six Cornell Extension bulletins, published two books, and was a consulting editor for PARENTS Magazine and other child-parent related publications.

Summary: Correspondence, research reports, films, voluminous nursery school records, and other materials constituting a history of the Department of Child Development and Family Relationships from its beginning as courses in Child guidance in the 1924 summer school to becoming an independent department. Also one volume with typescript history of the department; student papers for Mrs. Warin, and lessons for Christian agricultural missions in China, 1942.
